Art. 3 – THE DOCTORAL PROGRAMME

The first year training program is the same for every curriculum.

It is based on:

- three courses for a total of 80 hours, focusing on legal interpretation (30 hours), comparative law (30 hours) and European law (20 hours);
- 20 hours are devoted to seminars on related subjects, such as for example the circulation of legal models, the relationship between juridical and social sciences, juridical innovations due to the globalization phenomenon and economic analysis of the law;
- 20 hours of the program will be available for use by the doctoral students for attending meetings and seminars internal or external to the Faculty of Law, previously approved by the Director.

Lectures may also be given by both Italian and foreign lecturers from outside the Faculty of Law. They may be partly delivered in English, and, where deemed appropriate by the Doctoral Programme Board, also in French, German and Spanish.

The program for the subsequent years depends on the curriculum, delivered through seminars and short Programmes:

A) Private law, Comparative Private Law and Commercial law

The curriculum provides doctoral students with advanced training in the area of Private law, Comparative Private Law and Commercial law. The main goal is to enable doctoral students to acquire the knowledge and skills necessary to actively participate in the national and international scientific debate. The same knowledge and skills are also a prerequisite to a conscious use of legal concepts in the context of the resolution of problems arising between individuals and institutions and in contexts both private and public, national and international.

With regard to knowledge acquisition, the curriculum pays special attention to methodological issues. Both in terms of comparative law and national law, advanced training in the areas of private law presupposes the ability to critically analyse issues such as the functionalist and structuralist approach, legal change, the relationship between sources of law, forms of state intervention in the markets and in society, the role of non-state rules, the use of comparative law in the processes of rule-making and interpretation in the private and commercial law field.

In addition to methodological issues, the curriculum offers annual formative activities related to the main institutions in the private law area. Special attention is paid to the following topics:

- The interaction between technological innovation and legal innovation
- Intellectual property law
- European private and company law
- Private economic law
- Private organizations law
- Enterprise law

As far as legal skills are concerned, the curriculum focuses on some crucial aspects in the lawyer's job: interpretation techniques, writing techniques, understanding and resolution of legal problems, development of innovative doctrinal opinions. The educational activity is directed on one hand to provide the necessary theoretical knowledge to develop original research, on the other hand to the implementation of the main legal skills in the contexts usually analysed by private law.

One distinctive feature of the curriculum is its highly interdisciplinary approach to methodological and substantive issues, as well as to the analysis of legal skills. On each of these fronts, the dialogue with non-legal disciplines helps identify concepts and theories from different fields and develop the cognitive skills that enable the integration of different contributions. Specific attention is paid to the scientific debate in the field of law and economics. However, the curriculum also offers educational activities on the relationship between law and cognitive science, law and life sciences, law and technology as well as law and humanities.

B) Administrative, Constitutional and International Law

The topic areas covered during the second and third years of the Programme will study aspects of public law in detail and, in particular, the protection of fundamental rights.

In this part of the Programme, the curriculum will maintain a unitary structure, albeit spread over several disciplinary focal points, which may be interrelated within the perspective of national, comparative and Community and international law, due to the similarities in the substantial and procedural foundations of the protection of fundamental rights.

In particular, the curriculum area will cover the following topics:

- fundamental rights: philosophical origins and constitutional codification;
- fundamental rights: foundations, regime, structure and content;
- rights of EU citizens;
- rights of non-EU citizens;
- international instruments of protection: universal instruments (UN) and regional instruments (Council of Europe, AU - African Union, OAS - Organization of American States);
- international and supranational procedural instruments: international judges and Community judge; relations with national jurisdictions;
- sector-specific instruments of protection: freedom of thought (freedom of information technology, freedom of communication, rights of access to administrative documentation, protection of health data, protection of statistical data and system of derogation); participation in the administrative process; charter of services (the user's position in relation with the providers of public services); the instruments of implementation of the principle of horizontal subsidiarity;
- the rights of peoples, with specific reference to the principle of self-determination, the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, and the rights of indigenous peoples;
- rights of minorities (ethnic, linguistic and religious): instruments for individual and collective protection;
- human rights protection in armed conflicts, with reference to the interaction between human rights and international humanitarian law, to situations of belligerent occupation, and to the problems related to the human rights of combatants;
- the relationship between social and economic rights, the international protection of the environment, and the obligations ensuing from international trade law and international investment law;
- fundamental rights in relation to new technologies applied to biomedicine (BioLaw);
- instruments of protection: a) constitutional and EU justice; b) administrative justice and c) ordinary jurisdiction; d) International jurisdiction;
- instruments of protection: final protection and precautionary protection.

C) Criminal Law and Procedure and Philosophy of Law

The research topics proposed will take place in the following sectors:

- The harmonisation of Criminal Law and Criminal Procedural Law in a European and trans-national context.

In this sphere, the accent will be upon studies of the comparison between orders with special attention given to the harmonisation profiles, nowadays encouraged by supranational initiatives that run in the direction of adaptation of national laws with fixed principles in the provisions of Community or International law.

As regards the relationship with European Union Law, above all an analysis will be made of the means of common contrast in the fight against fraud, money laundering and safeguarding the environment, considering both the incriminating facts in point as well as measures of a procedural nature, such as for example the introduction of the European arrest warrant.

As regards the relationship with international law, the main focus of attention will be on the Statute of the International Criminal Court, and its implementation by means of the procedures before the Court of the Hague. The jurisprudence of the Court will be able to provide extremely interesting and numerous cues for initiating scientific investigations on fundamental questions concerning the basis of general criminal theory (indictment criteria, subjective factors and error, joint responsibility, mitigating circumstances, commensurate sentencing), the single instances of crime (genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity) and important procedural aspects (role of the prosecution, penal action, investigation techniques, the formation of evidence, ne bis in idem and efficiency of the judgement).

The consideration of international criminal law, involving the search for "substantial" justice, also gives rise to a renewed consideration of a legal-philosophical kind on the concept of justice and on the opportunity to harmonize principles and rules, to identify spaces in which a conception can be allowed that does not suffer the limitations shown by formalism.

- Criminal Law and new technologies.

In this sector the focus of attention will be on criminal law regarding information technology and the internet on one side, and the relationship between criminal law and bioethics, on the other.

On the first point, with the aid of the competencies in terms of information technology deriving from legal-philosophical considerations, the research may be directed towards the needs for discipline and legal harmonisation caused by the strong development of relationships by means of the Internet, with the consequent number of problems of a criminal nature pertaining to the protection of privacy and copyright, illegal interception, the spread of pornographic material, the identification of internet provider responsibility, as well as, regarding prosecution, the regime of evidence and international cooperation.

On the second point, research of an interdisciplinary nature can be carried out, in which the criminal justice and philosophical justice competencies on the relative themes are brought together, amongst other things genetic identity, techniques of assisted reproduction and the protection of pre-natal life, end-of-life treatments and the production of genetically modified organisms.

- Alternative means of resolving conflict.

This is a very contemporary area of investigation, centred especially on the area of conciliatory justice performed by means of mediation between perpetrator and victim and on the consequent identification of penalties which, although criminal, are characterised by a reparatory nature.

The privileged area is the criminal competence of the justice of the peace, called to intervene specifically with instruments of this type, and in any case never with custodial sentences, in resolving interpersonal conflicts which cannot be seen as serious forms of criminal activity.

In this regard an interesting area is the study of the particular procedural forms which the justice of the peace uses to achieve the aforementioned objectives, the criteria for imputation of the fact and especially the functionality of the penalty regime which the Judge is called upon to apply, the characteristic of which is not so much clemency as the objective of an effectivity to do with profiles of rehabilitation of the criminal and reconciliation between perpetrator and victim.

In the interdisciplinary key of this type of investigation, the legal-philosophical consideration brings a necessary contribution from the point of view of the structure and the purposes of the sentence, made even more current by the increasingly evident crisis of legitimisation of the traditional sentences.

- Legal Argumentation, Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure.

In this Programme the candidate will cover the subjects above all to do with the legal reasoning developed in the criminal procedure, in a descriptive way focusing on the different legal orders and also in a prescriptive way considering the specific logical and linguistic elements arising from the dialogical structure of the dispute. To be better understood and thematised, the latter of these does in fact require argumentative proceedings of a topic-rhetorical nature which the most recent post-positivist juridical epistemology has shed considerable light upon.

Regarding this point, it is essential to study from the theoretical, juridical viewpoint the questions concerning the interpretation of criminal and procedural law (as in the case of so-called scientific evidence) and of the forms of practical rationality that identify criminal law as a social procedure.

Insights about legal ethics and training in legal education will be provided together with the study on the legal argumentative methods, in order to address the specific education of practical jurists, and particularly of penal lawyers, to the necessary logic and rhetorical expertise.

D) The History of Roman Law and European Legal Thought in Europe

The topic areas covered during the second and third years of the Programme will embrace a very wide panorama of historical-legal studies, from Ancient law and Roman tradition to common law and complete modernity, with special attention paid to the jurisprudential and doctrinal aspects of law. The historical-juridical curriculum is not intended to play an inceptive role but rather to highlight the intrinsic historical dimension of jurisprudence and, in particular, of the scientific thought in the great season of classical Roman jurisprudence and, subsequently, of the theoretical developments in the long history of the ius commune Europaeum (the jus-doctrinal tradition).

The contribution of historical disciplines in the doctoral Programme will therefore on the one hand deal with the dissemination of the methodological and conceptual legacies contained in Roman Law and in the largest European legal tradition and, on the other, with the understanding of specific issues in the history of law, identified by the research topics of each doctoral student.

The specific topics of research which will be conducted during the two years following the first common year will cover matters relating to Roman legal experience, to the production of doctrine in public law, trial, the relationship between forms of literature and theoretical development (consultant and commentary literature) and the comparison of personal rights in their historical context.

Overall, the curriculum area will promote a concept of multidimensionality in law and its concrete manifestations.

E) Substantive and Procedural Labour Law

The topic areas covered during the second and third years of the Programme will study aspects of labour law in detail, in particular, the discipline of individual and collective employment relations in a European and trans-national context, as well as basic profiles of employment procedures and arbitration.

This part of the Programme will look at in detail, through interdisciplinary studies, the discipline of employment relations (employed, parasubordinate and self-employed) as well as the forms and methods of protection for workers (judicial and extra-judicial), in a broad sense and in a national and trans-national context.

As the study of these topics enters the realms of a system in which a multitude of national, international and Community sources of law interact, in order to optimise the use of comparative methods, the vocational curriculum has been structured in two levels: the first level studies in depth the general principles of the protection of fundamental individual rights and the principles characterising a fair trial; the second level studies more specific topics which are closely related to substantial and procedural labour law and the protection of workers. These are two different focuses of attention, they both play a part in the same unitary perspective, on a national and comparative law scale as well as an international and supranational scale.

From this point of view, special attention will be paid to issues related to the increasingly forceful drive towards legislative harmonisation, undoubtedly due to the strengthening of the European Union, but also noticeable on a trans-national scale, which substantially weakens the role of national sovereignty which is at the heart of all traditional social security systems.

As a result, in addition to generalised problems concerning the protection of rights and fundamental individual liberties, the curriculum area will also deal with the following major topics:

- the relationship between supranational law – with particular regard for European Union and ILO law (International Labour Organisation) – and national law;
- the harmonisation or “communitisation” of disciplines in different areas, with particular reference to: freedom of movement for workers
 - the rights of EU and non-EU workers
 - the protection of gender equality and positive action
 - the protection of privacy and new technologies
 - the promotion of employment and professional training
 - safety and the workplace
 - types of employment relationships: employed, parasubordinate and self-employed
 - the promotion and enhancement of flexible means of entering and exiting the job market
 - the creditor’s powers and workers’ rights
 - instruments and methods of protection: self-protection and judicial protection: civil, criminal and administrative
 - alternative protection measures to judicial action: conciliation and arbitration
 - the role of collective interest organisations in a national, Community and international context
 - trans-national and European collective contract negotiation.

The doctoral students will also be encouraged to participate in cultural and research initiatives organised by the Italian Association of Labour Law and Social Security (AIDLASS) and in the initiative promoted by the Italian Association of researchers into civil procedure.

The doctoral students will in addition be encouraged to participate in internships and scientific initiatives held in prominent foreign Universities with which exchange programs exist for young students and where some members of the Doctoral Programme Board, either permanently or as visiting professors.
