2. The programme offers training on an annual basis to provide students with advanced skills in the specific field of intercultural exchanges as applied to linguistic, literary, philological, historical and art historical disciplines through a series of specific seminar activities. The seminars are proposed by professors from the University of Trento, University of Augsburg and the Centre of Advanced Studies in the Humanities (CeASHum).
3. It is designed to further train researchers and scholars who are able to investigate how the transfer of specific characteristic elements takes place, from one culture to another. This research will be carried out using the most advanced tools available to the disciplines involved in the project, with further support from the four laboratories and the Phonetics Cabinet within CeASHum and with key support from the digital tools for humanists currently being developed by the Department.
4. Taught courses (the calendar and seminar titles will be specified in the course syllabus) are divided into the following:
